

Sears List of Subject Headings

INTRODUCTION AND HISTORY

In 1876, Charles A. Cutter, a librarian at the Boston Athenaeum, published Rules for a Dictionary Catalog, in which he listed three objectives for a catalog. These are still taught today, and have been regarded by many to be the classic objectives for a catalog (Jeng, 1997). According to Cutter, these objectives of a bibliographic system are:

1. To enable a person to find a book of which either
 - a. The author
 - b. The title
 - c. The subject, is known
2. To show what the library has
 - a. By a given author
 - b. On a given subject
 - c. In a given kind of literature
3. To assist in the choice of a book
 - a. As to its edition (bibliographically)
 - b. As to its character (literary or topical)
 (Cutter, 1904).

While these objectives still apply, it is the identification of a subject, given kind of literature, or character of a book that is of importance as they relate to the Sears List of Subject Headings. In order to meet 1c, 2b, 2c, and 3b of Cutter's objectives, controlled vocabularies of terminologies, which contain one term per concept were established and become known as lists of subject headings (Akers, 1969; Kaplan & Riedling, 2006). There are various subject heading lists with authorized headings that are used as the standard headings for a particular catalog to enable collocating of materials on a similar subject (Karpuk, 2008; Taylor, 2006). However, as Sanford Berman has indicated in his research, these headings lists do not always present the best terms (Berman, 1971).

The most popular list used in school media centers and small-to-medium sized libraries is the Sears List

(Kaplan & Riedling, 2006). Other subject heading lists include the Library of Congress Subject Headings (LCSH) used for college and university libraries, the Weine Classification Scheme for use in Judaica collections, and Medical Subject Headings (MeSH) developed by the National Library of Medicine. According to Joseph Miller, former Vice-President of Cataloging Services at H. W. Wilson Company and editor of the most recent edition of Sears, some specialized libraries use an in-house list of subject headings for the main focus area of the collection and Sears for general materials in the collection (J. Miller, personal communication, February 19, 2010).

BACKGROUND

The last of the three major subject heading lists, and one of the two still being used today, Sears first appeared in 1923 to join the Library of Congress's Subject Headings Used in the Dictionary Catalogs of the Library of Congress and the American Library Association's List of Subject Headings for Use in Dictionary Catalogs (see Table 1 for a timeline). The Library of Congress list has always been tailored to the needs of the Library of Congress, one of the largest research libraries in the world. According to the introduction to Sears, "The Library of Congress Subject Headings, which is in print now comprises five large volumes, is primarily a list of headings that have been used in the Library [of Congress]" (Miller, 2007, p. xvi). Thus, Sears was created "based on the headings used by nine small libraries that were known to be well cataloged" (Miller, 2007, p. vii) as determined by the original compiler, Minnie Earl Sears, and compiled into a single list – the List of Subject Headings for Small Libraries. Sears never intended that her list be used for juvenile materials, but rather for small and medium-sized general collections.

While Sears is now the mainstay of small and medium-sized-public libraries and K-12 collections,
