

Chapter 7

The Inter–Narrativity of “Life”: An Analysis of Tezer Ozlu’s A Journey to the Edge of Life

Nilay Tan Çakır

Ondokuz Mayıs University, Turkey

Recep Yılmaz

 <https://orcid.org/0000-0003-3406-2755>

Ondokuz Mayıs University, Turkey

ABSTRACT

*The present study evaluates the way how Tezer Özlü’s book Journey to the Edge of Life was constructed through narrative and aims to demonstrate how the narrative interactions in the book were employed. In this respect, narrative components and the concept of intertextuality were examined. The narrative of Tezer Özlü’s Journey to the Edge of Life was analyzed using the analysis method specified by Nedret Tanyolaç Öztokat in her book Theoretical Approaches in the Analysis of Literary Texts. The results obtained in this study have revealed the interaction between Tezer Özlü’s narrative and the texts in Cesare Pavese’s, Kafka’s, and Sivevo’s works and the interconnection between them.*

INTRODUCTION

Journey to the Edge of Life was written by Tezer Özlü in 1982. The author made trips to Berlin, Hamburg, Prague, Vienne, Rome, Zagreb, Belgrade, Niš, Treste, and Santo Stefano Belbo, where she took strolls in the parks, spend time in cafes, and chatted with strangers. The main purpose of her trips was to trace her favorite writers. In this respect, she visited Franz Kafka’s grave, found Svevo’s house and talked to her daughter, and found the hotel room where Cesare Pavese, an author she admired, committed suicide. Having learnt that she was born on the same day as Pavese, Tezer Özlü felt a connection with him and found herself reading his works time after time and identified herself with Pavese. Quoting from Pavese and following his footsteps, she created literary journeys with her own sentences. In a sense, during those journeys in which she was tracing Pavese’s suicide, she also made a journey to her inner world.

DOI: 10.4018/978-1-7998-4903-2.ch007

The Inter-Narrativity of “Life”

The present study evaluates the way how Tezer Özlü’s book “Journey to the Edge of Life” was constructed through narrative and aims to demonstrate how the narrative interactions in the book were employed. In this respect, narrative components and the concept of intertextuality were examined. The narrative of Tezer Özlü’s “Journey to the Edge of Life” was analyzed using the analysis method specified by Nedret Tanyolaç Öztokat in her book “Theoretical Approach in the Analysis of Literary Texts”¹. The results obtained in this study have revealed the interaction between Tezer Özlü’s narrative and the texts in Cesare Pavese’s, Kafka’s and Sivevo’s works and the interconnection between them.

Intertextuality, with a rough definition, refers to the interrelationship and exchange between texts and a polyphonic discourse. The term emerged in France thanks to Julia Kristeva and Tzvetan Todorov. It is the French equivalent of Mihail Mihailovic Bakhtin’s “dialogism”. Gerard Genette defines intertextuality as transtextuality. Michael Riffaterre, on the other hand, argues that intertextuality is the readers’ meaning creation and interpretation of a text by relating it to other texts. To Umberto Eco, intertextuality is a reflection of the previously written texts. The common point expressed in all these arguments is the “relationship that a text builds with other texts” (Azap, 2014, pp. 29-30).

Parallel with the view widely acknowledged among the scholars dealing with literature and narratology, Aktulum claims that each literary text today demonstrates its dynamism and specificity through intertextual references as well as other narrative elements. That’s the reason why contemporary text theoreticians consider intertextuality a fundamental criterion for literariness. However, Aktulum also points out that contemporary text theoreticians tend to maintain the structuralist approach while opposing it at the same time. Contemporary text theoreticians’ tendency to consider intertextuality a fundamental criterion for literariness and to embark on a quest to create meaning through making use of other texts distinguishes them from structuralists (Aktulum, 2018: 238). Ahmet Mithat Efendi stated that he was inspired by Cervantes’ Don Quixote while writing his novel “Çengi” (Dancer). Likewise, some expressions in Virginia Woolf’s Monday or Tuesday such as “white square of the marble” and “ivory depths” can be seen Sait Faik’s story “Çatışma” (Conflict) (Kolcu, 2008, p. 339 as cited in Azap, 2014, p. 30).

Also referred to as narratology, narrative theory – the roots of which date back to Plato and Aristoteles – has become a highly popular and comprehensive discipline in the past years. Narratology was accepted as a discipline with the publication of the special issue of the journal Communications with the title “Structural Analysis of Narratives”. The term “narratology” was coined in 1969 – three years after its publication – by Tzvetan Todorov, who was one of the contributors of the special issue (Jahn, 2015, p. 43). Narratology has developed considerably since then and has gained an interdisciplinary character that covers various disciplines including language, literature, history, theology, art history, psychology, philosophy, artificial intelligence, medicine, and communication (Jahn, 2015, p.7). To Jahn, narratology is the theory of narrative structures. In order to analyze a structure or to present “a structural description”, narratologists take the components of a narrative apart and then try to determine the functions and relations/connections. Narrative theories make a distinction between what is told (story) and how it’s told (discourse) (Jahn, 2015, p. 43).

Various definitions of narrative were presented here before conducting the analysis to be performed within the framework of this study. Narrative could be a combination of story and discourse; however, the thing that distinguishes narrative discourse from other text types is its ability to evoke stories in mind (Herman et al., 2005, p. 473). According to Mutlu, narrative refers to the narration of two or more events (or a situation and an event) that are logically connected to each other, take place in the course of time, and are connected with a consistent theme as a whole (Mutlu, 1998, p. 41). In its briefest and most concise sense, narrative is defined as the re-presentation of an event (Kıran and Kıran, 2003, pp.

12 more pages are available in the full version of this document, which may be purchased using the "Add to Cart" button on the publisher's webpage:

www.igi-global.com/chapter/the-inter-narrativity-of-life/270563

Related Content

Preservation and Access to Digital Materials: Strategic Policy Options for Africa

Trywell Kalusopa (2019). Digital Curation: Breakthroughs in Research and Practice (pp. 447-471).

www.irma-international.org/chapter/preservation-and-access-to-digital-materials/209343

Digitizing the Humanities: A Future for Libraries

Mandi Shepp (2015). Supporting Digital Humanities for Knowledge Acquisition in Modern Libraries (pp. 1-20).

www.irma-international.org/chapter/digitizing-the-humanities/132344

Digitalization of Labor: Women Making Sales Through Instagram and Knitting Accounts

Ceren Yegen (2019). Handbook of Research on Transmedia Storytelling and Narrative Strategies (pp. 234-250).

www.irma-international.org/chapter/digitalization-of-labor/207432

Culture Industry: A Contemporary Revision of the Term of Theodor Adorno

Claudia Sandoval Romero (2018). Enhancing Art, Culture, and Design With Technological Integration (pp. 1-24).

www.irma-international.org/chapter/culture-industry/201634

Networked Digital Spaces: Twitter in the Composition Classroom

Stephanie N. Phillips (2017). Engaging 21st Century Writers with Social Media (pp. 1-13).

www.irma-international.org/chapter/networked-digital-spaces/163783