INTRODUCTION

Family businesses have played a significant role in the global economy for centuries, and they continue to be a vital component of many societies today. These enterprises are unique in their nature, combining both family and business aspects to create a distinctive organizational structure (Hack-Polay, Igwe and Madichie, 2020). Family businesses are characterized by their ownership and management being closely connected to one or more families, with family members involved in the decision-making and operations of the business. This integration of family dynamics into the business realm brings about a set of distinct advantages and challenges that set family businesses apart from other types of enterprises.

In the intricate tapestry of business landscapes, few stories stand as timeless testaments to the power of succession and survival planning as that of Houshi Ryokan.
