

Chapter 13

Employer Branding: Pioneering HR Innovations

Pallavi Pahuja

CGC Landran, India

Ruby Sharma

CBSA, CGC Landran, India

Aaruni Batta

CBSA, CGC Landran, India

ABSTRACT

In today's fiercely competitive job market, establishing a positive image of your company as an employer of choice is paramount. This is the essence of employer branding - a dynamic process that aims to attract and retain top talent by effectively communicating a company's culture, values, and employee value proposition (EVP). HR leaders are pivotal in shaping and sustaining a compelling employer brand. By embracing innovative HR practices, they can craft workplaces that not only lure in the best talent, but also facilitate their growth and development.

1. INTRODUCTION

In today's fiercely competitive job market, establishing a positive image of your company as an employer of choice is paramount. This is the essence of employer branding - a dynamic process that aims to attract and retain top talent by effectively communicating a company's culture, values, and Employee Value Proposition (EVP).

HR leaders are pivotal in shaping and sustaining a compelling employer brand. By embracing innovative HR practices, they can craft workplaces that not only lure in the best talent but also facilitate their growth and development.

DOI: 10.4018/979-8-3693-2019-8.ch013

1.1 Concept of Employer Branding

Employer branding is the process of creating a positive image of your company as a potential employer. It is about attracting and retaining the best talent by communicating your company's culture, values, and employee value proposition (EVP).

Your employer brand is what sets your company apart from other employers and makes it an attractive place to work. It is the sum total of all of the experiences that people have with your company, both as employees and as outsiders.

A strong employer brand is important because it can help you to:

Attract top talent

Reduce employee turnover

Improve employee engagement

Increase employee productivity

Boost brand awareness and reputation

1.2 Theoretical Base of Employer Branding

The theoretical base of employer branding is drawn from a variety of fields, including marketing, human resources, and organizational psychology.

One of the key theories that underpin employer branding is the concept of employee value proposition (EVP). The EVP is the unique set of benefits that your company offers to its employees. It should be clear, concise, and compelling, and it should be communicated to potential employees throughout the recruitment process.

Another important theory that informs employer branding is the concept of employee engagement. Employee engagement is the degree to which employees are committed to their jobs and to their organization. Highly engaged employees are more likely to be productive, satisfied with their jobs, and loyal to their employer.

Employer branding can also be linked to the theory of organizational identity. Organizational identity is the way that an organization sees itself and how it wants to be seen by others. A strong employer brand is one that is aligned with the organization's overall identity. Employer branding is a complex and ever-evolving discipline. However, the core principles remain the same: to create and communicate a positive image of your company as a potential employer. By implementing a strong employer branding strategy, companies can attract and retain the best talent, create a positive employee experience, and build a strong reputation as an employer of choice.

Examples of innovative HR practices for employer branding are:

- Employee referral programs: Employee referral programs are a great way to attract and retain top talent. By incentivizing employees to refer their friends and family for jobs at the company, companies can tap into their existing network of employees to find qualified candidates.
- Employer branding campaigns: Employer branding campaigns can be used to raise awareness of the company's culture, values, and EVP. These campaigns can be run through a variety of channels, such as social media, job boards, and the company's website.
- Transparency and feedback: Transparency and feedback are essential for creating a positive employee experience. Companies can promote transparency by sharing information about the 6 more pages are available in the full version of this document, which may be purchased using the "Add to Cart" button on the publisher's webpage:

www.igi-global.com/chapter/employer-branding/341252

Related Content

The Global View of Sustainability

(2017). Managerial Strategies and Green Solutions for Project Sustainability (pp. 1-24).

www.irma-international.org/chapter/the-global-view-of-sustainability/178344

Core Business Processes in Enterprise Planning: Choosing the Structure of the System

Victor Portougal (2006). Business Processes: Operational Solutions for SAP Implementation (pp. 168-193).

www.irma-international.org/chapter/core-business-processes-enterprise-planning/6094

Solving an Integrated Sales-Leasing Problem With Remanufacturing and Inventory Shortage Using Differential Evolution

Masoud Rabbani, Sina Keyhanian, Mojtaba Aryaeeand Esmat Sangari (2018). International Journal of Operations Research and Information Systems (pp. 1-26).

www.irma-international.org/article/solving-an-integrated-sales-leasing-problem-with-remanufacturing-and-inventory-shortage-using-differential-evolution/206242

Quality and Process Management Systems in the UAE Maritime Industry

Michail Glykasand Johnichan George (2017). International Journal of Productivity Management and Assessment Technologies (pp. 20-39).

www.irma-international.org/article/quality-and-process-management-systems-in-the-uae-maritime-industry/170397

Designing Organisational Memory in Knowledge-Intensive Companies: A Case Study

Dee Alwis, Vlatka Hlupicand George Rzevski (2003). Knowledge and Business Process Management (pp. 137-153).

www.irma-international.org/chapter/designing-organisational-memory-knowledge-intensive/24841